Dear Mrs. Dunn:

This is in response to your survey regarding the SmartPay Program.

Let me begin by saying Delaware doesn't have a sales tax. The typical application of an exemption for the U.S. government lies in our public accommodations tax, imposed on stays in hotels and motels.

While theoretically the centrally billed cards document by themselves that the usage of the accommodation is that of official business, in practice, I don't think it is realistic to believe the hotel / motel will be able to keep track of the various permutations of issuers and numbers to distinguish use of the centrally billed cards from the others. In fact, the individually billed cards may be used for purchases that go beyond what the government considers to be governmentally sanctioned purchases.

Accordingly, the government employee on government business should present an exemption certificate, a copy of which is attached, rather than rely on the facility distinguishing personal use versus official use of the credit card.

I hope this is responsive to your inquiry. If not, please let me know.

Sincerely,

William M. Remington
